"To bring together the records of the past and to house them in buildings where they will be preserved for the use of men living in the future, a nation must believe in three things. It must believe in the past. It must believe in the future. It must, above all, believe in the capacity of its people, so to learn from the past that they can gain in judgment for the creation of the future."

PREFACE

This checklist continues the efforts of the American Imprints Inventory, begun in the spring of 1937, to build a file or union catalog of title slips which would represent the holdings of American libraries for each state in the fields of books, pamphlets, and broadsides printed in the United States prior to 1877; and to compile published checklists drawn from this material covering the publications of the various states and certain cities within certain periods. For this particular study the title slips for the State of Maryland, 1867-1869, now located in the Union Catalog Division of the Library of Congress, have been used.

In each instance, the author of this study has attempted to verify, to edit, and to give complete information concerning the entries. In order to do this it was necessary to visit some libraries, to write many others, and to solicit the assistance of many individuals. Without the patient assistance of the staff and officials of the Enoch Pratt Free Library, the Peabody Institute Library, and the Maryland Historical Society, this study could not have been completed. I am very grateful to the staff of the Union Catalog Division of the Library of Congress for allowing me the privilege of using its facilities.

And finally, I wish to express my gratitude to Don D. Bernard Theall and Mr. Myron W. Cetchell of the Department of Library Science, Catholic University, for their wise counsel and willing assistance.

INTRODUCTION

The American Imprints Inventory, a division of the Historical Records Survey program of the Works Progress Administration, under the direction of Douglas C. McMurtrie, was started in the spring of 1937. It was designed to be an accurate survey of extant copies of early American imprints located in libraries and other depositories throughout the nation. Its ultimate aim, however, was to compile a complete record of printing and publishing in the continental United States since the establishment of the first American press in 1639 at Cambridge, Massachusetts. For this initial survey and in order to insure a reasonable degree of accuracy the date limit was set at 1877, and an effort was made to search libraries all over the United States to discover books, pamphlets, newspapers, magazines, broadsides, and any other type of printed matter printed prior to that date. The great amount of material so collected resulted in a change of original plans, and it was decided to divide the material among the individual states, or certain cities, and among interested researchers. This particular study covers the imprints for the State of Maryland for the years 1867, 1868, and 1869.

The check-list, as here presented, has resulted from copying the reported titles and locations of the imprints as found in the Union Catalog Division of the Library of Congress. These were then checked with the Union Catalog and subsequently with the locations noted. Trips were made to nearby libraries and letters sent to those scattered throughout the distant states.

An attempt has also been made to record the history of Maryland for the three year period and to point up the political, social, and economic trends that had a direct bearing on printing and publishing. By this it is hoped that an understanding might be obtained as to the types of materials written and printed during this time.

The principal section of this study consists of the bibliography of Maryland imprints, 1867-1869, which is arranged chronologically and alphabetically. Symbols as to the location of imprints are given. These are the same symbols used by the Library of Congress in the Union Catalog. All symbols found on each title slip are included. A list of the newspapers published in Maryland during this period is also included, as well as a list of printers and publishers, and an author and title index to the bibliography.

HISTORY OF MARYLAND, 1867 - 1869

The April 2, 1866, proclamation of President Andrew Johnson, while officially declaring an end to the appalling devastation of the Civil War, did not bring immediate peace and harmony to either faction of the bitter struggle. In Maryland, as in most other southern states, there remained the long period of readjustment following war conditions. Recently unleashed savage emotions had to be calmed, still unreconciled ideals concerning the good or evil attributes of slavery as an institution had to be moderated, and the idea of a strong central government had to be made generally acceptable. Further, there were many who had profited by the war emergency, and who now sought desperately to retain their positions of influence. Principally, in the latter category, were those office holders who had raised themselves to power by force or by fraud, or who had been inducted and maintained in office by the aid of Federal bayonets. Now that these were no longer at their service, they employed diverse unscrupulous means to monopolize and to hold in perpetuity all the offices of honor and profit.

The constitution of 1864 had disfranchised some two-thirds of the citizens of the state on account of their sympathy with the South.¹ And, at the close of the war, of some 95,000 persons entitled to vote, about 60,000 were disfranchised under one pretext or another; and of the 35,000 qualified voters, it was estimated that 15,000 were of the opposition, so that the state was ruled by little more than one-fifth of its voters.² This minority, which had been ruling by virtue of the sword, "made desperate efforts to perpetuate their power by registration laws framed to exclude all but their partisans, and even by beseeching the Federal government to restore military law."³ Through their efforts in 1865 the Legislature passed an act to regulate the registration of the voters of the state. By this act the governor was to appoint from the most known for loyalty, firmness and uprightness, three persons for each ward in the city of Baltimore, and for each election district in the several counties of the State [to] register the names of all free white male persons⁴ entitled to vote. Three officers were also appointed to register names of all Maryland soldiers and sailors in the service of the United States who were not too far away to be conveniently reached. In practice, it was almost impossible to become registered unless one belonged to the party in power, for in addition to having to take the Oath of Allegiance he might be made to answer, under oath, any of some twenty-five questions, most of which dealt with his attitude or conduct toward the Confederacy or the Federal government. Thus a radical minority, born of the war years, was able to keep itself in power long after the actual fighting had ended.

It was not until January, 1867, after two years of bitter political struggle that the Legislature passed an act restoring the rights of citizenship to those from whom these rights had been denied, only requiring them to take oath that they would bear "true faith and allegiance to the United States, and support the Constitution and laws thereof as the supreme law of the land."⁵

On May 8, 1867, as a result of popular demand for a new and more progressive state constitution, a convention was held in the hall of the House of Delegates in the statehouse at Annapolis. Richard Carnichael of Queen Anne's County presided over the body.⁶ The convention remained in session until August 17th, at which time it had agreed upon and had drafted a new constitution for the state. In due time this constitution was adopted and went into effect October 5, 1867. With some amendments, this constitution is still in force in the state.

The constitution is composed of two parts. The first, called the Declaration of Rights, consists of forty-five articles. The second, is the constitution proper and outlines the form of government. The Declaration of Rights announced that the provisions of the Constitution of the United States and of this State apply as well in time of war as of peace, and any departure therefrom or violation thereof under the plea is subversive of good government and tends to anarchy and despotism.

The constitution conferred the franchise upon every white male citizen of the United States of lawful age (21 years) who had been a resident of the state for one year, and imposed no other test or qualification beyond the exclusion of convicts and lunatics. Persons elected to office were required to swear to support the constitution of the United States and to bear true allegiance to the State of Maryland.⁸ The word "white" was rendered of no effect by the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States which extends the right of suffrage to Negroes. The Legislature of Maryland rejected this amendment by a unanimous vote, but it received the approval of the necessary number of states and so was adopted.⁹

With its political status definitely assured, the state experienced a period of quiet and constitutional legislation. In 1863 the Congressional elections were fixed, as at present, on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November. It was enacted at that time that it should be the duty of policemen in Baltimore City to report to the police board the name and residence of every male person known by them to have died within the bounds of their districts during the year in order that these lists might be furnished to the registers. This was the beginning of the system of police census. Many minor changes were made by the Legislature during these and subsequent years in an attempt to eliminate the objectionable features of the elective machinery and to remedy the abuses to which it had been subjected.¹⁰

Probably the most significant event in Maryland's history for the year 1868 was the disastrous flood which occurred in July in the valley of the Patapsco River. Sudden and heavy rains into this river and area caused Jones Falls to overflow into nearby streets, to inundate dwellings, and to become a raging torrent carrying before it every form of movable property. Thirty nine lives were lost and the destruction of property was estimated at $3,000,000. The distress from this event was so deep and widespread that the Maryland Legislature and the Baltimore City Council adopted relief measures and large contributions were made by generous citizens.¹¹ This event caused much speculation as to measures for preventing the recurrence of such floods and many articles, pamphlets, and books were written and printed on the topic. This accounts for the large number of entries in the checklist concerning Jones Falls, its dangerous location, and possible relocation.

Politically, the year 1869 was uneventful, the entire Democratic conservative ticket being elected as it had been two years before. Economically, socially, and otherwise, however, the state continued to progress rapidly towards its present position of influence among the states of the nation. In 1869, however, there did appear upon the political horizon of Maryland the figures of Arthur Pue Gorman of Howard County and I. Freeman Rasin of Baltimore City. These two were destined to wield exceptional power as "bosses" or managers in the majority party, the first as holder of state and national offices, and the second as the power behind the scenes and who for many years hold visible or invisible control of the political arena in the center of population.¹²

Though Negroes were not allowed to vote in large numbers until 1870, some few free ones had voted in the first years after Maryland became a state. In 1869 the greatest problem of the Negro, however, was not that of securing political suffrage, but of earning a living. Personal services, common labor, and farming were those jobs easiest for him to penetrate. A few, particularly in the country, were blacksmiths and carpenters. Brickmaking and oyster shucking constituted seasonal occupations. There were also Negro stevedores, and at one period following the war, Negroes practically monopolized the ship-caulking trade and hod carrying. Also in 1869 the first Negro state labor convention in the United States met in Baltimore and recommended a nation-wide organization of Negro labor. Five months later a national assembly met to consolidate colored workmen of the several states, to act in co-operation with our white workmen in every state and in every territory of the Union who are opposed to distinction in the apprenticeship laws on account of color, and to act cooperatively until the necessity for separate organization shall be deemed unnecessary, and to petition Congress for the exclusion of coolie labor.¹³

There is, however, no further record of this early movement after the national convention.

The question of railroads and canals was one of engrossing interest throughout the state and entered largely into the political history of the year. The position of each candidate in reference to the building of new avenues of communication was made a test question at the polls.

According to the annual report of the Superintendent of Public Schools, there were 1,347 schools in the state and 75,402 pupils enrolled. Of these, 123 of the schools were for Negroes, with 5,443 scholars. Sixty-five of the schools for Negroes, with 2,489 scholars, were under the Baltimore authority. There was also a flourishing normal school in Baltimore for colored students with an average attendance of 210 scholars.¹⁴

Other miscellaneous notes on the year 1869 include the facts that the export trade was one of the state's greatest sources of wealth, that its coal fields appeared inexhaustible, and that the harbor of Baltimore had been greatly improved.¹⁵ Thus while the years 1867, 1868, and 1869 were not so outstanding historically, they did continue the rapid progress begun in the state after 1866.

HISTORY OF PRINTING AND PUBLISHING IN MARYLAND, 1867-1869

Up to 1880 the history of printing and publishing in the United States can be traced through three distinct eras of progress in the history of the country, each succeeding era indicating extraordinary advancement over the one just previous. The first period, 1639-1783, might be designated as the founding era, both for printing and the American colonies. The second period, 1783-1835, might be called the transitional era. At the close of the Revolutionary War the United States entered upon an entirely different condition of affairs, the tendency of which was to stimulate the establishment of new printing establishments in all the settled parts of the country "... and to supply them more adequately with the means of subsistence and growth, if not of large profits."¹ The third period, 1835-1880, is in all respects an era of rapid growth and expansion. To this third period belong the years 1867-1869.

In Maryland during the years 1867-1869, the history of printing and publishing is essentially a continuation of the story of institutions already well established and making notable contributions to the printing trade and to the field of journalism. The pioneers of the profession, William Nuthead and his widow, Dinah, William Bladen, Jonas Green, John Cruber, and others had laid a firm foundation; subsequent printers and editors had striven to keep Maryland, as well as the nation and world, well informed in the best traditions of a free press.

From the establishment of The Maryland Gazette, by William Parks at Annapolis in 1727, Maryland had been fortunate in having an independent press as well as newspapers of sharply contrary points of view. In the earlier days of the Federal Republic the leading journals were decidedly partisan, but comparatively dignified. For example, whether they were Federalist or Republican (Democratic), they were not so violently vituperative as much of the press elsewhere, notably that part of it directed by John Fenno, editor of the National Gazette, on the Federalist side and that of the Republicans or Democrats, led by Philip Freneau, editor of the National Gazette, on the other side. Once the organ of a colonial capital described by visitors as a leader among American communities in the development of the background which makes for grace and culture, the Gazette is still the representative journal of "the ancient city."²

During the Civil War period Maryland newspapers had suffered from shortages of supplies and labor, from vandalism, and from suppression by military generals whenever they thought a paper was guilty of treason. Of the Baltimore papers, only the American and the Clipper were loyal to the Union. The South, which first appeared on April ²¹ 1, 1861, three days after the Massachusetts Volunteers had been attacked in the city, was the Confederacy's most sincere advocate. With its interests and sympathies allied with the Confederacy, the Sun realized, nevertheless, the danger of open opposition to the Federal government. The paper remained neutral in the crisis, and according to Gerald Johnson in the Sunpapers of Baltimore, simply ignored the war. Throughout the war period the Sun gave scant space, if any, to news of the conflict.³

After the war newspapers and printing generally entered a period of expansion and consolidation, but until 1870, all the Baltimore papers were confined to one sheet folded in two and printed on the four pages. This did not seem to have adversely affected the influence of the newspapers; for the names of the Gazette and the Baltimore Sun are mentioned very often in all accounts of Maryland's history for the years 1867 to 1869. If Montgomery Blair, Charles E. Phelps, Thomas Swann, and others were responsible for beginning the movement to wrest the state from the tyrannical grasp of the radical Republicans of the Reconstruction epoch, the support of the Baltimore Sun enabled the independents and Republicans to rescue the commonwealth from the control of a democratic organization whose leaders had become defiant by reason of the power derived from the earlier anti-radical reaction.⁴ Perhaps the wide use, in adjoining states as well as in Maryland, of the term "Sunpaper" is unique in American journalism, and may be properly regarded as significant of the influence this locally controlled organ had upon the sentiment of the state, at least throughout this period.⁵

In his History of American Journalism, James Lee gives a rapid summation of the many changes which had been wrought in the printing profession during the period of reconstruction. He relates:

Hoe, in order to get speed out of the press, had taken the type from a flat bed and put it on a revolving cylinder. Craske had stereotyped the page of type so that pages could be duplicated for as many presses as that plant possessed. Bullock had begun to feed paper to the press from a huge roll. Morse, to help gather news, had stretched from Dan to Beersheba an electric wire which ran direct to the newspaper office. Other changes were soon to come. Mergenther (Baltimore) told the compositor to stop distributing type into cases after the paper had been printed and to cast a line-of-type at a time, to be thrown back, when used, into a melting pot; another inventor found a cheap method of manufacturing paper from wood pulp; still another, in order that the paper might have a late entry, put a "fudge" attachment upon the press so that even after the cylinders had started revolving, a bulletin of the latest item might be printed on the front page-- in a colored ink if desired.

A city news association collected the local items in every field of industry. A press association, composed of newspapers scattered over the continent, sent in the happenings of national importance. An international bureau of the four great newspaper gathering organizations literally watched the four corners of the world. In addition, a special corps of reporters and correspondents at strategic points not only at home, but also abroad, supplemented, but did not supplant, the cooperating agencies. The one-man commentator on the news became an editorial staff of several members. Their daily conferences made the editorial "we" a truth and a reality. But they still left a column or two for the letters of "Pro Bono Publico" and "Veritas," and let the cartoon, in a wordless editorial, state the policy of the paper. Pegs were driven in the walls of the sanctum for the hats of the city editor, the sporting editor, the dramatic editor, the literary editor, the Sunday editor, the financial editor, etc.⁶

The entire printing and publishing world benefited from these innovations and they, no doubt, account for the fact that during the years 1867 to 1869 there were some seventy newspapers printed in Maryland. In Baltimore there were eighteen newspapers printed, five of which were dailies. Annapolis had the next largest number, five, all of which were printed weekly or semi-weekly. The remaining forty-seven were scattered throughout the state.

While there appears to be an abundance of material concerning Maryland printers and publishers prior to 1820, this writer was unable to locate any adequate history on the subject for the later years. An investigation of early issues of The Inland Printer did, however, reveal an illuminating series of articles by Henry Lewis Bullen entitled, "Histories of Printing in America." Unfortunately, the article on Maryland, Virginia, South Carolina, and New Jersey stopped with the year 1773. In concluding the section dealing with Maryland Bullen stated:

Baltimore is now and always has been a print center, active beyond any other city of the same population. Some of the best printing of the present time (1914) is done in Baltimore. It is respectfully suggested to the printing fraternity of "Baltimore-Town" that a history of printing in Maryland is needed.⁷

Up to now, this suggestion has not been fully acted upon.

February, 1868. I desire to introduce to your favorable notice, Collin's Patent Grain Harvester. This machine has been tested for the past three years in Canada West, and in a test trial made between nine different machines. August 27th, 1867, in Huron, Canada, this machine received the first prize, showing among its other advantages, much less draft by the dynamometer, than the smallest machine on the ground. It was patented by James Collins of Cuckogh, Canada, February 18th, 1867. All communications relative to rights and royalties should be addressed to B. G.
